Yap, the island famous for its stone money still retains its traditional values and Micronesian way of life. Yap offers the diver virgin territory and is one of the last unexplored frontiers of diving. Steep walls and gutters shelter hundreds of fish with Manta Rays making their home in Yap waters, providing a major draw card for divers.

Yap is relatively undiscovered, consisting of four main and ten smaller islands, encircled by exquisite coral reefs.

Manta rays are the largest rays and are closely related to sharks. These harmless rays have a short tail and no stinging spine. They are very acrobatic; they can even leap from the water. These graceful swimmers are up to 29.5 ft (9 m) wide, but average about 22 ft (6.7 m) wide.
